"I chose ECU because I liked the units offered and the structure of the course."

Adapting to the learning and teaching systems of a different country was challenging, but the lecturers, tutors and many different academic support networks were extremely helpful and assisted me in achieving academic success.

While studying at ECU, I had the opportunity to complete an internship with Landgate. This opportunity helped me link theory to practice in the contemporary project environment. The skills I have learnt and the network I have been able to build throughout my internship will undoubtedly help me to excel in my professional career.

"The course provided networking opportunities with people from the oil and gas industry, and assisted in securing a job after graduation."

I decided to move to Australia to pursue further studies and follow my dreams of working in the oil and gas industry. ECU was my first preference because of its reputation in the industry. The lecturers have been astonishing. They provided every possible support from assignment advice to career guidance. I have formed very close bonds with some of them and we still maintain contact after graduation.

ECU's course is industry focused and is built on contemporary industry standards, with close associations with organisations such as the Australian Institute of Project Management and the Project Management Institute. The course provided networking opportunities with people from the oil and gas industry and assisted in securing a job after graduation.
